

Advanced and Complex Medical Emergencies (ACME) Course

Course outline

The (ACME) course is for Fellows in Emergency Medicine and aims to use simulation training methods to improve the understanding of human factors and their impact on the quality of team-based clinical care within the emergency medicine environment. The course also features an update on key clinical skills with core modules on cardiovascular instability, airway and respiratory emergencies and complex emergencies.

While there is a significant immersive simulation component to the course, there are also small group discussions and mini-scenarios on various aspects of the complex specialty of Emergency Medicine. The ACME course aims to stimulate and provoke the experienced physician practicing emergency medicine and who wishes to be challenged. Because the emphasis in this course is on learning and sharing information, there is no formal assessment of participants.

Requirements

The course is now available for:

- FACEMs
- ACEM trainees in their final two years of training*
- EM Certificate holders
- SMO/CMOs working in emergency departments **

* ACEM trainees in the final two years of training must provide approval from their DENT that their level of experience/function is considered appropriate.

 SMO/CMO or equivalent working in emergency departments must provide approval from their DEM or DENT that their level of experience/function is considered to be similar to the level of a senior registrar or consultant.

Course format and duration

The course is presented over 2.5 days comprising activities which focus on realistic simulations of common medical emergencies. All participants have an opportunity to participate in the management of a simulated emergency, and strict confidentiality is maintained at all times.
